Predatory Pricing as an Abuse of Dominant Position in Czech and EU Law

Abstract

The thesis deals with predatory pricing which represents an abuse of dominant position. First, the thesis focuses on the main issues necessary to understand the basis of predatory pricing and reflects on how to address this abuse so that the ban on predatory pricing achieves its objectives. Second, the thesis describes what the competition authorities have to prove in order to establish that predatory pricing has taken place. Third, it deals with circumstances which are often associated with predatory pricing and, therefore, give a valuable clue as to whether predatory pricing has occurred or not. Fourth, the thesis focuses on sanctions that may be imposed on firms involved in predatory pricing.
